Explanatory notes to the form ‘Transfer of value’

Attention!

Like Philips Pensioenfondsen, many pension funds in the Netherlands operate an average-pay and/or final-pay pension plan. Under such a plan the employer makes a commitment to the employee regarding the pension benefit that the employee will receive when he/she retires.

Other pension funds operate a Defined Contribution Plan or an investment policy. Under this scheme the employer pays a fixed contribution that goes into an investment pot, as it were, with the ultimate level of the pension benefits depending on how the money is invested and what results this yields.

If the pension plan with the previous employer is a Defined Contribution Plan or an investment policy, the following must be borne in mind:

As a consequence of market fluctuations, the value of the pension can appreciate or depreciate considerably between the time when the request for a transfer of value is made and the time when the pension is actually transferred to Philips Pensioenfondsen by the previous pension administrator.

If you choose to transfer your pension, you should be aware that the actual transfer takes some time. A period of ten months is not unusual. Only after the investments from your investment pot have been sold and their value has been transferred by the previous pension administrator to Philips Pensioenfondsen does it become clear what the exact value of the pension is.

If you do not wish to run the risk of a decrease in the value of your Defined Contribution pension during the period of transfer, then you should take all appropriate measures (such as, for instance, switching to lower-risk securities), if necessary in consultation with an investment consultant or the present pension fund/pension administrator. Philips Pensioenfondsen accepts no liability for any decrease in the value of your investment pot.
