Information accompanying the form 'Partner registration – registering your partner'

What requirements does your partner have to meet to claim a survivor's pension from Philips Pensioenfond in the event of your death?

If you are living together without a registered marriage or civil partnership

In this situation, you must fill in the form and send it to Philips Pensioenfond. For your partner to claim the survivor's pension, neither of you may be married or be involved in a civil partnership. You must also be living together at the same address and conduct a shared household. Another requirement is that you may not be first-degree relatives by blood or affinity. If you are living together outside the Netherlands, then you must also send documentation showing that you both live at the same address. Your partner can only claim a survivor's pension if you register your partner with us before your retirement date. If your relationship status changes, you will need to notify Philips Pensioenfond as soon as possible. You can use the form 'Partner registration – deregistering your partner' for this. Bear in mind that this will affect your survivor's pension.

If you married or registered your civil partnership abroad

In this situation, you must fill in the form and send it to Philips Pensioenfond. You also need to include your official marriage certificate or civil partnership certificate as documented evidence of your marriage or civil partnership. Your partner can only claim a survivor's pension if you register your partner with us before your retirement date. If your relationship status changes, you will need to notify Philips Pensioenfond as soon as possible. You can use the form 'Partner registration – deregistering your partner' for this. This will affect your survivor's pension and retirement pension. Visit www.philipspensioenfond.nl/en/endrelationship to find out more.

Should you take out ANW shortfall insurance?

You can take out ANW shortfall insurance with Philips Pensioenfond until three months after you officially start living together, marry or register your civil partnership. If you have ANW shortfall insurance, your partner will be paid an additional allowance in the event of your death, if their income is not enough. To find out whether you might be interested in this insurance, and what the conditions are, watch the 2-minute animated video. The video, and further information, can be found on www.philipspensioenfond.nl/en/anwshortfall
